

Amelia Harehart realized that the world sometimes seemed lopsided: boys were allowed to do different things than girls. But she didn't carrot all if it wasn't the norm: she climbed trees, went sledding, and hunted just like the tuft boys did.

Amelia always had an ear to what strong lady hares were up to. She kept a scrapbook of newspaper clippings and photos of furnominal females in jobs that were typically hopular with male rabbits to inspire hareself.

After leaving school, Amelia became a nurse's aide at Spadina Military Hospital in Toronto, Canada. Later, she moved to California, where she learned to fly.

With the help of her sister and mother, Amelia furnished her very first hareplane: a Kinner Harester. She named it "The Canary," because it was bright yellow.
